ZTO Cable (China) specializes in ADSS cables for power lines and long-span aerial projects. They provide full in-house production, including fiber drawing, cabling, and testing, with options for customized fiber counts, jacket materials, and connector types. Their ADSS cables are all-dielectric, self-supporting, and suitable for distribution and transmission networks worldwide. Wireon Cables offers ADSS cables with up to 432 fibers and gel-free buffer tube options. Their designs support spans up to 3,500 ft and include double-jacket protection for higher strength and durability. The cables comply with IEEE 1222-2004 and IEC 6079-1 standards, featuring loose tube stranded fibers around a non-metallic FRP central strength member, with aramid yarn reinforcement and PE or anti-tracking outer sheaths. ZMS Cable manufactures ADSS cables and accessories, including preformed suspension clamps and dead-end clamps. Their products are designed for high-voltage lines, heavy ice areas, and long-span installations, providing strong grip, low corona, and lightweight solutions suitable for 220kV and above. Prysmian provides ADSS cables for spans up to 800 meters, suitable for both distribution and transmission applications. Their solutions are engineered for aerial deployment with high mechanical strength and environmental resistance. Zion Communication produces ADSS cables with all-dielectric construction, using loose buffer tubes or ribbon fiber arrangements. They incorporate aramid yarns for tensile strength and protective sheaths against water and UV exposure. Their cables are se...
