

Gigabit Single-Mode Fiber Network Card

AI Overview

A Gigabit Single-Mode Fiber Network Card provides high-speed, long-distance connectivity using a PCIe interface and SFP transceivers compatible with single-mode fiber (SMF). Overview A Gigabit Single-Mode Fiber Network Card is designed to connect computers or servers to fiber-optic networks, supporting 1 Gbps full-duplex transmission over long distances using single-mode fiber (SMF) cables. These cards typically use a PCIe x1 or x4 interface to connect to the host system, ensuring sufficient bandwidth for gigabit speeds while minimizing CPU utilization through features like Interrupt Moderation and hardware-based time synchronization (LevelOne GNC-0110) .Key Features SFP Slot Compatibility: Accepts Small Form-Factor Pluggable (SFP) transceivers, allowing flexibility to choose modules for single-mode fiber (e.g., 1000BASE-LX/LH, 1000BASE-BX10-D/U) depending on distance requirements .Long-Distance Support: Single-mode fiber NICs can transmit over kilometer-scale distances, with some SFP modules supporting up to 40 km on a single strand of SMF .Power Efficiency: Many cards support Energy Efficient Ethernet (EEE), reducing power consumption during low network activity by transitioning to a low power idle (LPI) state .Network Management: Features like IEEE 802.1Q VLAN support allow network segmentation, enhancing security and performance .Remote Management: Built-in Wake-on-LAN functionality enables remote system startup .Operating System Support: Compatible with multiple OS platforms, including Windows and Linux, ensuring broad deployment flexibility .Installation and Compatibility Select an available PCIe slot (x1 or higher) on the host system. Insert the NIC carefully and secure it with bracket screws. Install drivers and firmware from the vendor to ensure proper recognition and performance. Insert the appropriate SFP module for single-mode fiber, matching the required distance and wavelength (e.g., 1310 nm for 10 km, 1490/1550 nm for longer links) .Connect SMF cables to the SFP...
