

Price of Fiber Optic Flange Butt Joint

AI Overview

Fiber optic flange butt joints typically range from $10 to $150 per unit, depending on type, material, and connector compatibility. Fiber optic flange butt joints are precision components used to align and connect optical fibers with minimal signal loss. Prices vary based on connector type (FC, SC, LC, ST, SMA, E-2000, etc.), material (stainless steel, phosphor bronze, or vacuum-compatible alloys), and whether the joint includes additional features like mounting flanges or L-brackets for mechanical stability . Typical price ranges: Standard multimode or singlemode mating sleeves: $10–$30 per unit for basic plastic or metal sleeves . Flange-mounted or vacuum-compatible butt joints: $50–$150 per unit, often used in high-precision or laboratory applications . Bulk packs or OEM-ready adapters: Prices can be lower per unit when purchased in quantities of 10–25 pieces . Where to buy: Thorlabs offers a wide range of mating sleeves and flange adapters compatible with FC, LC, ST, SMA, and E-2000 connectors, including premounted L-bracket options for custom assemblies . Fosco Connect and DigiKey provide various fiber optic adapters, ferrules, and sleeves suitable for multimode and singlemode applications . Alibaba and other industrial suppliers list optical flanges and butt joint components, often with customizable options for high-precision or environmental resilience . When selecting a fiber optic flange butt joint, consider connector compatibility, fiber type, environmental conditions, and mechanical mounting requirements, as these factors significantly influence both performance and cost . For exact pricing, it is recommended to check supplier catalogs or request a quote, as prices fluctuate based on quantity, material, and technical specifications.
