

Price of factory electrical distribution box cover

AI Overview

Installing a standard electrical distribution box cover typically costs between $50 and $180 for materials, with total installation costs ranging from $350 to $1,800 depending on labor and complexity.

Cost Breakdown

Materials: The cover itself varies by type and material. Basic plastic or metal covers for a single box usually cost $50–$80, while premium covers with features like AFCI/GFCI protection or larger multi-wire configurations can cost $120–$180. Weatherproof or tamper-resistant covers may add 30–60% to the base price.

Labor: Installation time depends on accessibility, wiring complexity, and whether additional work like conduit relocation or panel upgrades is required. For a straightforward replacement, labor typically takes 2–3 hours, costing $300–$600 total. More complex installations with additional circuits or behind-wall access can take 4–5 hours, raising total costs to $900–$1,800.

Additional Factors:

- Box type and amperage: Larger or higher-capacity boxes increase both material and labor costs.
- Location and access: Tight spaces, crawl spaces, or finished walls can increase labor time.
- Safety features: Adding AFCI, GFCI, or RCD protection increases material costs and may require extra wiring.
- Permits and inspections: Some regions require permits, which can add to the total cost.

Summary

For a typical residential installation of a standard distribution box cover:

- Basic replacement: $350–$600 total
- Premium or complex installation: $900–$1,800 total

Planning ahead and specifying the exact box type, safety features, and installation requirements can help control costs and avoid unexpected expenses.
